The « European Energy Transition Conference » seen by ENGIE GROUP

« The ENGIE Group is a close industrial partner of the regions as its activities are intimately linked to the local life there. This year Bordeaux hosted the European Energy Transition Conference and this not-to-be-missed event only goes to strengthen the regional ties of the local players committed to energy transition. The many initiatives and achievements of ENGIE and its subsidiaries testify to our commitment as a partner company of the local economic development.

The 2017 Energy Transition Conference in Bordeaux enabled the organization of several high spots illustrating our determination to provide support for the challenges facing the regions. It was the opportunity for Isabelle Kocher, ENGIE's General Manager, who took part in the Political round table, to meet the Nouvelle-Aquitaine Region's various players and discuss the public service delegation of the geothermal energy network for Bordeaux Right Bank. In point of fact the ENGIE subsidiaries Cofely and Storengy proposed an innovative integrated solution for deep geothermal energy, combining the Group's know-how in the field of heat networks and the expertise in subsoil exploration and development. Continuing on from this, a framework agreement between ENGIE Storengy and INP Bordeaux/ENSEGID was signed at the Energy Conference to enable cooperation on local projects for geothermal energy and energy storage, under the high patronage of Alain Juppé, Chairman of Bordeaux Métropole, and Alain Rousset, Chairman of the Nouvelle-Aquitaine Regional Council.

As a player committed to taking up the great challenges of the energy revolution, ENGIE will of course be present at the next European Energy Transition Conference which will be held in Geneva at the end of January 2018.»
