Publication of the guide:
« Citizen renewable energy projects:
Guidance to get you off to a good start »
 BY THE FRENCH ASSOCIATION « ENERGIE PARTAGÉE »

At the beginning of June, the french association “Energie Partagée” published a brand new practical guide intended for people and groups wishing to launch a citizen renewable energy project but not knowing where to start.

This guide brings together a few major issues that can serve as a basis for collective reflection for a nascent initiative.

Structured around 6 major issues, it encourages groups to make an assessment of their group dynamic, territory and specifics of the project they intend to develop and also to question the ambition and ultimate purpose of the undertaking.

Created on solid and shared bases, the project will then be able to advance serenely through the administrative, technical, economic and legal steps while keeping on the citizen track where the pleasure of working together blends with conviviality.

About “Energie Partagée”:

“Energie Partagée” spins out, supports and finances citizen renewable energy production projects. In order to accomplish these missions, the movement is organized into two complementary structures:

- an association that promotes and leads, whose aim is to sensitize people to citizen energy and bring the players and project owners together at the national level,
- a citizen investment tool that collects the savings of the citizens and directly invests them in the capital of renewable energy production projects.
